We have engaged widely with young people through the various events and activities outlined in Part 1 and examples of responses to those needs are evident in the list of activity – again in Part 1.

We have established a Rewilding Youth Collective, a group of young people who are passionate about identifying and helping provide inspirational ways in which to encourage children and young people to connect with the beautiful world that we live in. This group consult widely with other young people in the city through Rewilding Research Roadshows and feedback to the Directors of Rewilding Youth CIC in order that future practice can respond to the needs of young people identified through such consultations.

We use social media (Instagram, Facebook and Twitter) to connect with our communities and respond to suggestions and queries on a daily basis through these channels.

We also disseminate surveys requesting feedback at the end of any courses/workshops etc and also meet weekly with the alternative education providers we work with in order to discuss and issues, feedback and potential suggestions for further activities or suggestions for improvement.

As part of our British Science Association Ideas Fund project we have been conducting research with young people who are disengaged from mainstream education into how being outside and engaging in some of the activities we facilitate in the outdoors has an impact on their wellbeing. A full report is available for this project and an academic paper is currently in press.
